Currently there is a HUGE Demand for Gunsmiths.

Millions of guns need fixing. Most of the old-time gunsmiths have retired and haven't been replaced because previously there wasn't a cost effective way to quickly train individuals to become gunsmiths and help them make money fast. This has created a chronic shortage and a huge opportunity for you.

Gunsmithing is a recession-proof business. Even in tough times people spend money to get their guns repaired or professionally cleaned. It's a lot cheaper than buying a new one and they still want and need them for hunting and self defense. You can even work part-time right from your home. Your one time investment in the course could provide you with a lifetime of income and opportunity.

Here's how AGI's Professional Gunsmithing Course changed Robert Briskey's life: "Within one short year I opened up my own firearms repair and custom refinishing shop. My business is exceeding my dreams. The freedom I enjoy being self-employed is priceless. Without the opportunity that AGI's course offered, my dream would be just that, a dream."
Robert T. Briskey, Battle Hen Armory

You don't have to wait to start gunsmithing! It only takes a relatively small investment to get started. As soon as you begin watching the videos you will be able to start making repairs. Anytime you run into a problem, you just pop in the DVD on the subject or model gun that you need information on and do a quick review.

Couldn't get a better recommendation: "I made the mistake of taking another cheaper gunsmithing course. I knew I made a mistake when I read in one of my lesson books that for further instructional help, go to the AGI website and get a DVD on the subject. When other schools are giving YOU that kind of acknowledgement, then you have to be the best."

A Holster That is Out of this World

I have to admit to being more of a minimalist when it comes to going about my daily routine, even when it comes to concealed carry. Heck, I don't even like carrying a cell phone or a wallet in my pocket due to the bulk they present. Factor in that most cell phones are now the size of small flat screen TVs and you'll understand why I'm still using my busted up iPhone 4. With such an aversion, you can also understand why I felt carrying a firearm on my person, while psychologically comforting, was physically a hassle—particularly when my basic wardrobe most of the year consists of shorts, a T-shirt and flip-flops.

It can be hard to conceal a firearm adequately in such light attire. I experimented with a number of potential carry guns with some too big to conceal and some too small to shoot as well as I'd like. I switch out often in order to test new guns for the job, but I enjoy carrying a Bersa BP9CC. It's a single-stack semi-auto that is slender and comfortable to wear, as well as accurate and reliable.

Once a gun is chosen, the real challenge is how to carry it—inside the waistband, outside the waistband, tucked in front, tucked in the back, strapped on the strong side. When Tyler Botts with Alien Gear Holsters sent me one of his company's Cloak Tuck 2.0 IWB Holsters, I was like Goldilocks eating Baby Bear's porridge. It was just right.

The inside-the-waistband Neoprene composite holster doesn't add much weight, wears tight, yet comfortable to my body and, with the nylon clips, doesn't cause my pants to sag at the waist. I hardly even notice my gun is there. Check out a more detailed review in our annual Shooting Guide coming to newsstands in just a couple of weeks and in the meantime, visit Alien Gear's website at aliengearholsters.com. This is one sweet holster. GDTM

Good Catch

I read the "Comparing Carry Revolvers" article in the February 2015 issue with great interest, because I am in the process of determining how and what I will be carrying. In the article, it states, "... shooting an assailant without a gun at ranges of less than 7 yards will put the defender in a bad position in a civil suit." (Italics mine.) Is this accurate, or should it be the reverse? If the assailant is less than 7 yards away, that would place him within my defensible space, correct? Thank you for clarifying this for us.

—Sam Boyd, Billings, MT

(You are correct Sam. That was a miss on our part. It should have read "more than 7 yards."— Editors)

Measuring Up

In your January 2015 issue, page 18, you show a picture with the caption saying it's a micrometer. I'm a machinist by trade and that is not a micrometer. That is a caliper, and I would never use them to measure down to tenths of a thousandth. Over all I enjoyed the article.

—Jim McCready, via email

(Thanks Jim. Researching a response to you, we learned more about calipers and micrometers than we ever planned, but you are definitely correct. As to which is best for reloading, there seems to be some disagreement among the handloaders we spoke with.— Editors)

Massad Miss

I just read "The Semi-Auto Advantage" by Massad Ayoob in the Spring 2015 issue. All of the technical information presented was probably correct, however the article read so much like a paid endorsement for Glock that its credibility was lost on me. He could have just as easily said "most service size 9mm semi-automatics ..."

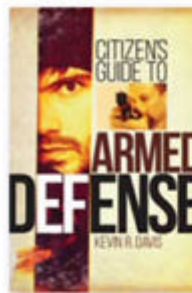

—Jeff Dewey, via email

(We should've specified that article was a reprint from one that first ran in a special Glock edition of Modern Shooter magazine, thus the Glock references.— Editors)

Ammo Ban in the Works

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms announced plans to ban a popular type of .223 ammo. Claiming M855, or “green-tip,” ammo is capable of penetrating body armor and does not fall under the exemption for “sporting purposes,” the agency says it must ban the military surplus ammo because it is now a handgun cartridge. An ATF press release says the increase in popularity of AR-type .223-caliber handguns makes the ammo a viable handgun cartridge.

Previously, only “armor-piercing” ammunition available in handgun-specific calibers was prohibited, a provision under the Law Enforcement Officers Protection Act, which gives the ATF unilateral power to decide what constitutes a “sporting purpose.”

Gun rights organizations question the reason for this proposal, considering there is no evidence .223-caliber

Surplus M855, more known as green tip ammo, may become unavailable if the ATF has its way. iStock Photo handguns are used to shoot police officers or in any other crime.

The proposal is “intended by the Obama Administration to suppress the acquisition, ownership and use of AR-15s and other .223 caliber general purpose rifles. The decision continues President Obama’s use of his executive authority to impose gun control restrictions and bypass Congress,” the NRA said in a statement.

The NRA also stated the ban on steel-core ammo could be interpreted as a potential ban on non-toxic, solid copper bullets, which are being pushed by anti-hunting organizations that are also pushing for a total ban on lead bullets and shotshells.

IN THE NEWS

A Redding, Calif. gun shop owner’s efforts to help crime victims defend themselves was blocked by gofundme.com after he set up an account to collect money to buy guns for them. Bastiani Arms owner John Bastiani received an email from gofundme saying he violated the company’s terms of service. He then changed the purpose to help pay for concealed carry classes. “They suspended that account, too,” he says.

A legal defense fund (gogetfunding.com/project/van-gilder-legal-defense-fund) set up to help a New Jersey man arrested for possession of an antique firearm is nearing its $25,000 goal. Gordon Van Gilder, 72, faces felony charges after a routine traffic stop by a Cumberland County deputy sheriff. The flintlock pistol, at least 250 years old, was in Van Gilder’s glove box. He could face up to 10 years in prison.

Texas Sen. John Cornyn (R) introduced a bill that would allow state-issued concealed weapons permits to be valid in other states. The Constitutional Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act aims to reduce confusion over state laws regarding concealed carry permits. Some states allow gun owners to carry their guns across state lines while others do not. Cornyn’s bill is similar to one introduced last year that failed to pass.

Will Dry Firing Damage Your Gun?

There's no substitute for range time when it comes to honing your shooting skills, but with the cost of ammo, punching paper or pinging steel isn't always an option. Dry firing can be a great substitute. You can "shoot" in your living room as often as you like. Dry firing allows you to work on trigger control, breathing and other proper shooting techniques. But will dropping the firing pin on an empty chamber damage your gun?

"You can dry fire any Ruger as much as you want. It's a great way to practice trigger control and helps build good shooting habits," says Ruger's Mark Gurney.

Gunsmith David Sams agrees, sort of. He says most modern, quality guns can withstand repeated dry firing, but extensive dry firing can damage the firing mechanisms. Older guns may not be able to take the repeated stress.

Sams says the best way to avoid any damage is by using a snap cap, which is designed to absorb the repeated impact of the firing pin during dry firing. He says an empty case is a good substitute, as well.

ARMED & COURAGEOUS

A convicted sex offender with a lengthy criminal record was shot and killed after he tried to break into a home in Van Zandt County, Texas. Christopher Ray Foster, who was also known as XX and Outlaw, was out on a personal recognizance bond when he attempted to force open a side door on the rural home. A woman who was alone at the time shot Foster. She was praised by local law enforcement, which ruled the act self-defense.

A Columbus, Ohio home intruder's luck went from bad to worse after he was shot and killed by a homeowner. The unidentified criminal broke into one home but was chased through the house by the resident. He jumped out a second-story window and then broke into another occupied house across the street where he was shot dead by the homeowner. The woman who killed the intruder had gotten a gun from her son for protection just days prior to the event.

.357 SIG

This cartridge is based on the .40 S&W case, simply necked down with a short neck and a sharp shoulder. The design purpose was to achieve .357 Magnum revolver ballistics from a semi-auto pistol. This cartridge design offers several potential advantages. First, its compact nature allows use of a smaller (shorter) grip frame in pistols so chambered. For shooters with smaller hands, this is significant; many find similarly powerful chambered firearms too big for proper handling. Second, the .357 SIG can effectively launch lighter bullets at greater velocity to achieve similar muzzle energy with less recoil. All of these considerations figured in the development of this cartridge.

The .357 SIG is loaded to a comparatively high pressure level—the same as top .357 loads. The combination of high pressure, reasonable case capacity and no barrel venting allows this cartridge to generate significant ballistics—fully the equal of the .40 S&W in terms of muzzle energy. However, there is a price to pay—muzzle blast is significant. Compared to the .40 S&W, the .357 SIG has only one primary advantage, that being a slight reduction in recoil. GDTM

Glock returns with a new optic system that's got the gun world talking.

BY ROBB MANNING

Glock MOS

Not surprisingly, much of the talk about what's new in 2015 has centered on the offerings from America's favorite Austrian gunmaker and its release of the MOS (Modular Optic System) line of pistols. The MOS line includes four models, including the re-release of two competition favorites, the G34 and G35, as well as last year's buzz generator, the G41. The fourth model is the brand-spanking new G40, a 10mm long slide. I was able to get my hands on the first three models, but Glock isn't shipping the G40 yet, so I wasn't able to get one.

Optic Buzz

While Glock isn't the first gun maker to offer a model with a slide machined for optics, it has definitely garnered the most buzz. Other manufacturers have been talked about amongst the competitive shooting community, but none more than Glock. With the popularity and reach of Glock's brand into the tactical, law enforcement and civilian sectors, the new MOS will take optics mainstream.

Optical sights mounted on handguns have been popular with competitive and target shooters for years. However, before Glock introduced the MOS line, competitive shooters had to either purchase an aftermarket slide, which can cost almost as much as a new Glock, or have their slide machined by a gunsmith, which can easily cost a couple hundred big ones. Now for an MSRP of $840—about $90 more than a standard G34, G35 or G41—you can buy a Glock that comes optic ready.

Competitive Edge

The MOS line was primarily developed for competition shooters, with the exception of the G40. The MOS also has applications for tactical purposes, however. No one is against acquiring their targets faster, which optics allow you to do. In a tactical role the MOS would excel for much the same reason it does in competitive shooting, and the tactical community takes just as many cues from competitive shooting as it does from anywhere else. It's all about fast target acquisition, fast transition from target to target, and fast follow-up shots. Plus, if one arm becomes immobilized, racking the slide one handed is really easy with a tough optic such as the Trijicon RMR.

More importantly, a red dot optic places your aiming point on the same focal plane as the target. With conventional iron sights, the front sight is in focus while the target is blurry. This essentially puts the target in your peripheral vision. A red dot allows you to have a clear aiming point and a clear target. For a cop or military personnel covering a suspected threat, that's a huge plus. From a hunting perspective with the G40, this would allow you to assess your game animal while keeping your aiming point trained on vitals. For police tactical units that adopt the Glock MOS, it's feasible they would swap out the standard iron sights for Glock's taller ones, which would allow the iron sights and red dot optics to co-witness.

Naturally, the main feature of the MOS line is the 1.939-inch long by .196-inch deep section that has been machined into the rear of the slide to allow for mounted optics. It comes with a cover plate weighing 1.416 ounces to fill that section when the shooter isn't using optics, plus four optic plates, each weighing about .75 ounces. The plates are numbered: 01 for Eotech, Insight, Doctor and Meopta; 02 for the Trijicon RMR; 03 for C-More; and 04 for the Leopold Delta Point. Installation is easy; simply unscrew the baseplate and remove, then position the plate designated for your optic. After that, attach the optic plate using the included screws and consult your optic's manual to complete installation. It usually takes just a couple of screws to attach, and all models use the same set of plates, even the 10mm G40. The G40 is able to use the same plates because, according to Glock techs, unlike the G20, which has the large frame wide slide, the G40 has a narrow slide like the G41.

MOS Models

The specs don't change much from the standard Gen4 models to their MOS counterparts. The G34 MOS is 8.74 inches long with a height of 5.43 inches and a width of 1.18 inches. The bore axis is 1.26 inches and the sight radius is 7.55 inches. It weighs 25.95 ounces. There's a difference in length between the two variants of .07 and a weight difference of .07 ounces, but nothing noticeable. Non-MOS versions of the G35 or G41 were not on hand to compare with the MOS versions, but Glock lists the specs of the MOS variants of those models as right in line with the standard Gen4 variants, just like the

G34. Magazine capacity, trigger pull, trigger travel and other specifications remain unchanged from the standard to MOS variants.

The G40 differs from the other three MOS models in that its intended mission is not competition but is meant to be a hunting handgun. Therefore it does not have slide length restrictions because it doesn't need to fit into an IPSC box.

Hunting has no maximum barrel length restrictions (conversely, most restrictions are for a minimum length) so it has a full-length long slide like the G17L and G24. The slide length on it is 9.49 inches with a sight radius of 8.19 inches, which gives the 10mm more range and accuracy potential.

On the G34 and G35 there is a really thin wall that separates the cutout and ejector, about .02 inches thick. In the months after their introduction, some have voiced concern about how well this will hold up, though Glock assures us it will. The wall actually curves so that by the time it reaches the extractor, it's much thicker. Even if it were to chip, it doesn't look like it would affect function at all since it doesn't secure the extractor or the extractor plunger.

For those Glock aficionados who might prefer the third generation Glock or perhaps don't want an MOS, fear not. I talked to Connie Kempfer, Glock Marketing Coordinator, and she said the company has no current plans to discontinue the third generation G34, G35 or G41, or the Gen4 non-MOS versions. Glock is a business, however, and as a general rule plans can and will change. I can't imagine sales of the non-MOS Gen4 to be that great with the MOS version out, and it's doubtful Glock will keep them around for sentimentality. Since the G41 was introduced post-Gen3, it doesn't have a Gen3 variant available and they won't start making one anytime soon. The G40 will be MOS only. Glock will not offer MOS slides, so if you already own a G34, G35 or G41 and want an MOS, you'll just have to pony-up for a new Glock.

Since the frame, barrel and all the other innards of an MOS Glock are the same as the non-MOS equivalent, all aspects of the shooting experience aside from the optic are the same. It handles the same, it feels the same, and it has the same accuracy potential. What it does have is the option to use an optic as a tool to better your shooting. To do so, however, will still require practice.

Range Time

I'm just a slightly above average pistol shot, and I fired tight groups with this one. Using Federal HST 124-grain JHP and the G34 with a Trijicon RMR at 45 feet, I fired a five-shot group that I could almost cover with a quarter. I fired groups just as good with the G35 and G41, and groups almost as good without the optic. So even without the optic these are still very accurate.

After raising up a handgun and using iron sights to acquire a target for the better part of 25 years, using an optic doesn't feel as natural, so it will take some time. I really like it, though, and given some time it's something I could really appreciate.

It's a given that the MOS line will be a hit amongst competition and target shooters, but this is going to really change the game in the tactical and defensive carry community as well. Not because Glock was the first to put a MOS-type model on the market — because they weren't — but due to how prolific and accepted Glock is in the shooting universe as well as in American culture as a whole. Nearly every movie and TV show with guns in it features Glocks, and if a pop song mentions a gun, chances are it's a Glock. Nearly three-fourths of law enforcement personnel have a Glock visible on their hip, and almost every gun store you go to sells them. There's little chance that the MOS line won't be a hit. GDTM

Carry 1911

Ithaca Gun Company will probably always be known for their slide-action Model 37 shotgun, but the company also produces world-class 1911s.

BRAD FITZPATRICK

The Other Ithaca

Ithaca has produced a lot of guns over the years, and the bulk of those have been Model 37 slide-action shotguns. In fact, up until the turn of the 21st century, the Ithaca 37 was one of the major competitors in the pump-gun market, with a simple, yet effective bottom-eject design that originated on the desk of John Moses Browning himself. For years, sportsmen and law enforcement officers used Ithaca 37s for everything from squirrel hunting to clearing houses.

Things changed for Ithaca in the mid-2000s, and by 2005, the company was bankrupt. It seemed the end of an era of firearms production, and when the announcement came that the 37 might be gone forever, Ithaca fans emptied the remaining inventory from gun store shelves. The forecast of doom was a bit premature, though, because when the New York-based company closed its doors, it was promptly purchased and moved to Upper Sandusky, Ohio, a largely rural community about 40 miles from the shores of Lake Erie. Under new management the company was once again in the black, and with modern, updated machining technology, the new Model 37s were better than the previous gun.

When sales of the Ohio-manufactured Model 37 increased, the team in Upper Sandusky started work on a new project, a high-quality 1911 built to customer specifications. That may seem like quite a leap from pump shotguns, but a look at Ithaca's history reveals that the development of an Ithaca-branded semi-auto .45 wasn't that great a leap. Nor was it a new concept; during World War II, Ithaca produced more than 380,000 1911 pistols for the United States military, and those sidearms became some of the most highly valued WW II guns. So when Ithaca announced its plans to offer built-to-order 1911s in

Hard Chrome 1911

2010, the revelation came as less of a shock to those familiar with the company's history.

The 1911s

Although the new 1911s share much of their DNA with the guns that the company produced in the 1940s, the differences in the manufacturing process are tremendous. The Upper Sandusky facility, which was converted from a roller rink into a gun company, is home to some of the most modern machining tools available. With the equipment in place and the ability to make several different components on a single machine, Ithaca was poised to build pistols in-house.

Ithaca's sleek new 1911 begins life as a single block of steel, and from that block of steel, the frame and slide are cut using wire electrical discharge machining, a process wherein metal is cut using discharges from two electrodes in a dielectric liquid bath. If it sounds complex that's because it is, but the resulting parts have tight tolerances. Rows of modern CNC machines at the Ohio factory allow Ithaca to create virtually all of the small parts for the guns like hammers, firing pins and triggers in house, so production of almost all of the parts for each custom 1911 happens under one roof.

Quality control allows tolerances to be kept within five-millionths of an inch, which is just one of the reasons that the Ithaca 1911s are so smooth and so accurate. Another facet of producing a target-quality 1911 is to match it to a superb barrel, and Ithaca's are among the best currently available. The machining process is something of a trade secret, but the barrels are machined in the factory and are sent out to have the rifling electrochemically cut into the bore, creating a smooth, virtually burr-free bore for accurate shooting.

One of the final steps in the process happens in a small room in the center of the factory. Bryan Stoops, head of manufacturing for the 1911 handgun, and his team spend the day testing new customer guns for fit and function. It's meticulous work, and very time consuming, but Stoops and the rest of his crew hand finish each gun,

GOING COMMANDER

For 2015, Ithaca is adding a new Commander option to their lineup of custom 1911s. Bryan Stoops says that the new Commander will be designed primarily as a carry pistol, and the shorter (4.25 inch) barrel makes it perfect for that application. In addition, the gun will have a Nitride finish to protect it against moisture, critical for any gun that will be carried against the body for extended periods of time. As with any custom Ithaca 1911, there will be custom options, but look for the new gun to have a set of high-quality combat or night sights standard. There are a number of grip options to consider as well, from aggressive G10 styles to traditional wood. Look for the starting price for these guns to run about $2,100, though pricing hasn't been set yet. In addition, Ithaca is coming out with a new production 1911 that will have many of the same great features you'll find on their custom guns with a more modest price tag.—B.F.

FEDERAL PREMIUM'S PERSONAL DEFENSE HST AMMUNITION

Federal Premium's Personal Defense HST ammunition was a natural choice for testing Ithaca's new 1911. This premium defensive ammunition features a specially designed hollowpoint bullet that won't separate from the jacket and delivers nearly 100 percent weight retention when fired through a variety of barriers. The HST bullet performed extremely well in the FBI test protocol, is a natural selection for those who need an accurate, effective defensive bullet, and it is a favorite of law enforcement professionals the world over. The bullet nose design and nickel-plated case offer superior feeding for the most critical situations. In this test, the HST bullet proved to be extremely accurate and there were no feeding or extraction problems throughout the test. Average groups measured under 2 inches from a bench rest at 25 yards, and this pistol/ammo combination would be ideal for competition or personal defense. Federal Premium's Personal Defense HST ammunition is available in 9mm Luger (124 grains), .40 S&W (180 grains) and .45 Auto (230 grains). MSRP for a 20-round box ranges from $32-$35. lapping, stoning or filing where necessary, until the last rough edge is removed and the gun fits tight and runs smooth.

Trigger Time with Ithaca

I had a chance to test one of Bryan's guns recently, a custom Ithaca 1911 with black grips and a nitride protective finish. Since Ithaca builds custom guns, there are many different options and styles, but the gun that Bryan gave me to try out had a smooth black finish on the metalwork and black Hogue grips. These guns are available with either BoMar-style adjustable target sights or Novak adjustable combat sights, though there are other options available as well if the customer chooses.

The model I tested had combat style rear sights with a Trijicon front sight, an ideal combo for rapid target acquisition in most lighting conditions. It also had a skeletonized tool steel trigger and skeletonized hammer, a lowered and flared ejection port, hand-fit match-grade stainless steel barrel bushing and an extended beaver-tail-style grip safety.

The front strap was heavily textured for a sure grip, and the rear of the slide was serrated. The metalwork was smooth and simple, with "Ithaca Gun Company Upper Sandusky, Ohio" on the left side of the slide and "M1911A1" on the right side. When you have a gun this nice it doesn't need dressing up, and the Ithaca I tested looked darn good in basic black.

Virtually every clone of the 5-inch 1911 shares the same profile, but closer inspection reveals the true nature of any .45. The fit and finish of the Ithaca 1911 is extremely good, and everything on this gun is smooth. When you pull the slide back there is no unevenness or roughness, a testament to the job Bryan and his team do during the finishing stages of production. There are no gaps or machining marks, and everything fits tightly.

On the range, the Ithaca performed extremely well, keeping groups under 2 inches during the test firing process using Federal Premium's Personal Defense HST jacketed hollowpoint rounds. Everything about the Ithaca feels tight, solid and smooth, and the result of all that hand work is a pistol that shoots extremely well and runs flawlessly. Throughout the test, there were no feeding or function issues. The trigger pull was light and clean, and one of the nice things about purchasing a custom pistol is that the client gets to choose the type of sights that are mounted on the gun. I found the setup on the test gun to be excellent; the black combat rear is effective and works for concealed carry (you won't hang these sights on clothing when you draw). The Trijicon front sight, which is dovetailed into the receiver, offers a clear sight picture in low light.

The fit and finish on the Ithaca 1911 is extremely good and the gun, with any of the optional features, shoots as well as it looks. Ithaca Photo

This is a very versatile sight setup, and if I were ordering an Ithaca 1911 tomorrow, I'd choose the same irons.

The heavily textured front strap is easy to hold onto, and the Hogue grips worked well, though you can also choose your own grips when you order the gun if you prefer something a little different.

No matter how the gun is dressed, this is one of the best shooting 1911s you can buy, and even though the price of purchasing a custom gun may seem a bit high to many shooters (the custom 1911 from Ithaca, depending on your list of options, will run you around $2,000), but the quality of the workmanship and the resulting accuracy make this a bargain in the world of custom 1911s.

It's been an interesting decade for the Ithaca brand. Less than 10 years ago the company was bankrupt and closing its doors, but with new owners and a new, modern factory it seems that Ithaca has righted the ship. The brand may always be best known for producing high-quality, durable pump shotguns, but the new 1911 is certainly a gun that will only expand on that legacy. GDTM

This is one reliable and accurate concealed carry pistol.

BY RANDY FERRIS

Walther CCP 9mm

The much awaited 9mm Walther CCP has finally arrived on dealer's shelves, and I couldn't wait to get my hands on one. Overall, the pistol is accurate and completely reliable as a self-defense gun. For those shooters who simply loved the ergonomics of the model's big brother, the PPQ M2, they're going to love this trimmer version as well. But as with every change in a favored gun's design, sometimes a few benefits are lost, and I discovered a few small things I would change with this great new model. But first things first.

Gas-Delayed Blowback

Let's start with the operating platform of the pistol. It features a gas-delayed blowback operation with a fixed barrel. The slide rides on top of the frame without any rails on either the slide or frame. Fixed-barreled blowback pistols typically generate a lot of recoil, which is why you don't normally see them chambered for anything hotter than the .380 ACP or the 9x18mm Makarov.

The most popular way to make a fixed barrel blowback work with the 9x19mm Luger cartridge is to employ a gas delay system. This works by putting a small port in the bottom of the barrel that bleeds some of the gases into a frame mounted under the barrel cylinder. As the gases fill the cylinder they are slowed by a slide-mounted piston, thereby dissipating the recoil. This is the same operation used by the excellent HK P7 and the short-lived Wilson Combat Advanced

Fans of the Walther PPQ M2's ergonomics will find a lot to celebrate in the smaller CCP. Author Photos

Defense Pistol (ADP). Walther calls this operation Softcoil Technology, which is exactly what it does.

Because of the gas-delayed blowback system, the CCP does not need a complicated recoil spring system, and because of the fixed barrel design the CCP does not need a guide rod, either. This allows for one large recoil spring to be used which rides around the barrel. This makes the slide very easy to rack, a real benefit for small statured or female shooters who might struggle with a heavier slide.

Design Features

The CCP is 6.41 inches in length with a 3.54-inch barrel. It is 5.12 inches high, with a width of 1.18 inches and a weight of 1.39 pounds. The safety is mounted on the left side of the frame and simply pushes up to engage and down to disengage. There is also an accessory rail beneath the forward frame.

The rear low-profile sight is adjustable for windage and the pistol also comes with two additional front sights. One impressive highlight is the pistol's ergonomic design. The underside of the trigger guard is generously undercut to allow you to get your entire hand on the grip with the highest hold possible. The shape and texture of the grip is near perfect for helping attain a firm grasp that keeps the pistol from shifting in hand from recoil. It does this without employing an aggressive waffle pattern that is seen on the grips of some of the other sub-compact handguns on today's market. Likewise, all the controls—magazine release, slide release and safety—are within easy reach of your right thumb.

When Walther first announced the CCP about a year ago, many shooters, including myself, thought it would be a smaller single-stack version of the Walther PPQ M2. While it may look that way at first glance, there are actually vast differences. For one, the PPQ is not a piston-driven, gas-delayed, blowback-operated pistol. It also has slide and frame rails but comes without a safety. There is one other profound difference as well: the CCP does not share the same light, smooth trigger pull and quick reset as the PPQ.

The trigger pull on the CCP has a weight of 5.5 pounds—acceptable for a self-defense pistol—and comes out of the box with a long, grittier pull than the PPQ. Likewise, the trigger must be let out to its original position in order for it to reset.

The good news is that after firing a little over 200 rounds through the pistol, the trigger pull on the CCP I tested has smoothed out considerably. I would anticipate the trigger to get even smoother still, but that will not improve the lack of enhanced reset.

Field Stripping

Field stripping the pistol is also slightly disconcerting at first glance. To take-down the pistol, you must first remove the magazine and triple check to make sure there is no live round lingering in the chamber. At this point you need to locate the supplied takedown tool.

After that, push the tool in toward the metal tab at the top of the circle on the rear of the slide. When the tab is depressed, push the entire tool into the rear of the frame as far as it will go. Next, you'll need to keep the tool depressed in the slide, retract the slide about a quarter inch, pull the rear of the slide up until it clears the fixed barrel and then push the slide off of the barrel. Finally, pull the recoil spring off the front of the barrel and you are ready to clean the pistol.

Reassembly is completed by merely reversing this process, except you must align the piston, mounted inside the front of the frame, with the gas cylinder under the barrel. The assembly/disassembly process takes a little time to master, but once you get the hang of it you can do it pretty quickly.

At the Range

The pistol is accurate out to 25 yards, and solid torso hits were the norm with American Eagle 115-grain FMJ rounds. At 30 feet, Speer 124-grain +P Gold Dot hollowpoint ammo consistently produced groups that could be covered by a half dollar. Federal Guard Dog 105-grain ammo performed well too. Federal Premium 124-grain Hydra-Shok ammo produced outstanding grouping with almost all five rounds touching each other.

Final Thoughts

During my testing, the Walther CCP's trigger pull and field stripping process were the two main points of concern that I had, though I am probably now an expert with the process so it is of little lingering concern. If you do need help with the process, Walther provides a helpful tutorial video on its website (waltherarms.com). Likewise, the trigger pull has smoothed out nicely over time. Add to that the excellent ergonomics and great accuracy, and I give this pistol a well deserved two thumbs up. GDTM

The CZ Custom Shop delivers the ultimate carry pistol.

BY RANDY FERRIS

Custom Carry

To be honest, I have coveted the CZ PCR Pro-Tek 1 pistol for several years. Now that I've had the chance to test one, I don't think it's too high praise to call this handgun an exquisite masterpiece turned out by the wizards at the CZ Custom Shop. The instant I wrapped my hand around the grip I immediately knew the Pro-Tek 1 was built for speed, an obvious Ferrari among handguns.

The Custom Shop

The Pro-Tek 1 begins its life as a CZ 75 Compact D PCR pistol. Once it is turned over to the custom shop in Mesa, AZ, the transformation begins. First, workers completely dehorn the pistol. Next, they chuck the standard rubber panels and blend a set of textured aluminum grips into the frame for a near perfect fit. This also lessens the width of the pistol from 1.34 inches in its original PCR configuration to 1.14 inches in the Pro-Tek 1 version. The slimmer grip frame accentuates the curve of the backstrap and helps the pistol melt comfortably into your hand.

The slide is given an octagonal cut with a flat top that completely changes the lines of the pistol and gives it a streamlined appearance. The Pro-Tek 1 also comes with three-dot night sights, though Heinie Straight Eight sights are available as well. The rear sight is a low-profile wedge type that is adjustable for elevation by means of a large screw atop the sight. There is no manual correction dial for changing the horizontal point of impact, but the Pro-Tek is built to shoot dead center out of the box. The decocker has been cut back to make it less obtrusive without sacrificing its function or ease of manipulation by the shooter. A CZ competition hammer is also installed on the Pro-Tek model, while the slide is given a glossy polycoat finish. The aluminum frame is anodized in a bronze/gold finish that makes for an attractive pistol. The bronze/gold was originally the only option for the frame color, but the Pro-Tek is also now offered with a black frame. If the SHOT Show 2015 reports prove true, the CZ Custom Shop is also looking at other colors for the frame such as gray. I look forward to seeing what colors are ultimately determined.

The Pro-Tek 1 also features a short reset trigger that has been worked over to give it perhaps the best pull I have ever experienced. The Pro-Tek 1 I tested breaks cleanly at 3.3 pounds in the single-action mode and 7.2 pounds when fired double action. Additionally, the firing pin block has been left intact but has been smoothed and polished quite nicely. Whether it's the trigger, hammer or slide-to-frame fit, I dare say you'll have a hard time finding a smoother operating pistol.

All the controls (decocker, slide stop lever and magazine release) on the pistol are in easy reach of the right thumb. The magazine release button is slightly extended but smooth and deburred; when it is activated the magazine falls free. The magazine well has been beveled to improve the process of recharging the pistol with a fresh magazine. There is very little CZ didn't do to attain their goal of making the Pro-Tek 1 the ultimate performance carry pistol.

At the Range

As wonderful as the pistol is to hold and admire, the best experience came after I hit the range. Whether I was shooting standard or +P loads, the Pro-Tek handled recoil beautifully. The grip frame spreads the recoil evenly across the web of the hand between the textured grip panels and the beavertail, which means the pistol stays centered in your grasp. The recoil handling aspects of the pistol and the short-reset trigger make accurate follow-up shots much more attainable.

As far as accuracy goes, if you like all of your rounds to produce one gaping hole in the center of the target, you'll like firing the Pro-Tek 1. I fired 200 rounds of American Eagle 115-grain FMJ ammo and 50 rounds of PMC 115-grain ball ammo with no feeding or ejecting issues. This was also my experience with defensive ammo, including 124-grain Speer Gold Dot Hollow Points, Federal Premium 124-grain Hydra Shok and 105-grain Federal Guard Dog cartridges.

It is difficult to find any fault with the CZ Custom Shop's Pro-Tek 1. This is what a custom pistol should be: the design is well thought out, the craftsmanship is first rate and the finished product is an absolute joy to shoot. As I said in the beginning, the Pro-Tek is exquisitely crafted. The pistol is not always easy to come by, but with persistent requests to your dealer and patience during the customization process, it's well worth the effort. GDTM

Textured aluminum grips slim the overall pistol down to a mere 1.14 inches. The slimmer grip frame accentuates the backstrap and helps the pistol melt comfortably into the shooter's hand. Author Photo

The 3 IDEAL Gunfighting

By the numbers, the infamous Luger has been involved in more combat kills and casualties than any other handgun. The author believes it is the best pointing and most accurate military pistol ever issued.

OLDEST Pistols of All Time

Designed originally for combat and the wild frontier, these tools served effectively in wartime and continue to attract the interest of history buffs and collectors alike.

BY JIM DICKSON

The three greatest gunfighting pistols of all time, based on the number of kills and casualties made with them, are the Luger, the M1911A1 and the Colt Single Action Army. The circumstances surrounding these exploits are not likely to ever be duplicated again so their positions seem safe for all time.

The Luger

Used worldwide in the first part of the 20th century, the Luger saw its greatest action in German hands during the two World Wars. It was during the World War I that it earned the distinction of being the only pistol that was a major tactical weapon capable of winning a war. But for the entry of the United States in the war, it likely would have tipped the scales in Germany's favor.

The story is rarely told today, as the victors write the history books and the losers' exploits are often deliberately left out whenever the history re-writers can get away with it. Such is the case with the story of the Luger.

While World War I was defined by barbed wire, machine guns and artillery, combat in the trenches was an incredibly close-quarters battle. Entrenching tools and knives often had the advantage over rifles and bayonets in the crush of battle in the confined spaces of the trenches. This is where a pistol is best. Even at the closest quarters fighting you can hold off your enemy with your left hand while you shoot him with the pistol in your right.

It was reported that the British and the French were reluctant to issue pistols to all of their rank and file because the soldiers were mutinying in large numbers. Also, the pistol was still an officer's badge of rank and something that just wasn't shared with enlisted men.

The German army had a different attitude. It was run like a very strict authoritarian family. Mutiny was never a consideration. When the troops needed pistols, the Fatherland set out to supply them, despite the fact that the Luger pistol cost three times as much to manufacture as the Mauser rifle.

The Luger proved more than up to the challenge.

It took in stride the mud, dust and sand that was a WWI artillery barrage and kept on working even when the famed Smith & Wesson Triple-Lock Revolvers were jamming. It would continue firing when its barrel was bulged from being clogged with mud. A Browning-style gun with the slide over the barrel is jammed solid until a new barrel can be installed when its barrel is bulged. This feature saved so

A well-worn, pitted Remington Rand M1911A1 from WWII that will still shoot 2½-inch groups at 25 yards all day long. There is play in the slide to allow plenty of room for dirt and sand, but it does not hurt its accuracy one bit. It has never jammed under any conditions. This is a gun to stake your life on.

The Model 1873 Colt Single Action Army revolver with a 4¾-inch barrel in .45 Colt, the classic gunfighter's weapon of the Old West.

many German lives in the First World War that when the P38 was designed, the army specifications demanded a fully exposed barrel on it.

All the Luger needs for reliability is a magazine spring that is as strong as you can get in the magazine along with proper ammo—standard velocity ammo of the proper overall length. Hot loads cycle the action too fast for the magazine to feed cartridges in position to chamber before the bolt rides them down. This was never a problem with German army issue ammo.

A larger problem, however, was the fact that the average German soldier was not a pistol shooter. The Luger handled that problem better than any pistol before or since.

The Luger is the best pointing pistol ever made, bar none. Just point at the target and you hit it. It is as simple as that. It is also the most accurate pistol you will ever find. Most any good Luger will shoot a 10mm group with 9mm ammo at 25 yards.

Armed with the Luger, the German troops proved a terror in trench fighting. Every stormtrooper was issued one regardless of rank, and production was geared up to equip every combat soldier by late 1918 or 1919. The Luger was a key factor in the new stormtrooper tactics, as well as the new infiltration strategies of General Von Hutier and Colonel Bruchmuller, which had knocked Russia out of the war. The intensity of the trench fighting and the number of kills made by the Luger was staggering.

World War II saw more intense fighting with the Luger often being used against Russian human-wave assaults. Sometimes it was the officer's only weapon and sometimes it was the last thing he had loaded magazines for. At those close ranges one could hardly miss. Once more the tally went up drastically. Add to these figures the numbers of the other countries' armies that used the Luger and you get a number far exceeding any other pistol.

The number two spot in numbers of enemies killed should go to the M1911A1 .45. During the first part of the 20th century, Americans took great pride in their skill with a pistol. There have always been American soldiers who prefer the pistol to the rifle at close range, "close range" being a relative term that some will take out to 100 yards or more. Nothing is faster on target than a pistol and that fact has saved the life of many a pistoleer in combat.

Ramping up pistol production took priority over rifle production when America entered WWI. Unlike the French and British, the Americans were quick to issue pistols to anyone who needed one. WWII saw more handgun use with house-to-house and jungle fighting all within easy pistol range. Americans got their first look at human-wave assaults with the Japanese banzai charges in the Pacific Theater. They experienced them again in Korea when the Chinese communists obeyed their Russian advisors and launched the same sort of human-wave assaults Russia had used against Germany in WWII. The M1911A1 has also seen close-quarters fighting in Vietnam and subsequent wars.

The M1911A1 is the most reliable pistol in harsh conditions that is possible to make. I have seen an M1911A1 throw sand out of every joint with the first shot and keep on firing. An unaltered military M1911A1 will tolerate more rust, dust, sand and mud than any pistol ever made and continue to fight. Its FMJ 230-grain bullet is a sure fight stopper with a hit to the vitals. It is a natural pointer, and with a little practice, many shooters can't seem to miss with it. While it comes in second to the Luger in the number of people killed with it, the M1911A1 remains the ultimate fighting pistol.

COLT SINGLE ACTION ARMY

Finally, we come to the classic gun-fighter's revolver, the Colt Single Action Army .45 Model of 1873. The old cowboy six-gun is what the public thinks of when they think of a gun-fighter's gun, although its tally of kills is well below that of the Luger and M1911A1 quite simply because it was never employed in such widespread conflicts as World Wars I and II.

Most of its kills were racked up on the frontier where many a pistoleer insisted it was as accurate as a rifle out to long carbine ranges, and would proceed to prove it to any doubters.

Today's shooters often can't get the same results because they don't grip it and cock it correctly. If you cock it like you would a double-action revolver with the thumb held lengthways behind the hammer, it will throw your grip low to the round bottom of the gun, and it will tend to shoot to one side or another without ever pointing very well.

The correct way is to lay the thumb crossways on the hammer and cock it as you would one of the old cap-and-ball Colts with the vertical hammer. This throws your grip high. You should have the cocked hammer forced against the top of your hand, with the ball of the hand behind the trigger finger squeezing one of the flat Colt logo panels, and the thumb squeezing against the other. Put the first joint of the trigger finger over that narrow trigger, and if possible touch the tip of the trigger finger to the tip of the thumb.

This puts the gun's backstrap against the center of the palm of your hand. Squeezing the flat logo panels aligns the sights with whatever you are pointing at, and squeezing the trigger at the same time converts the act of pulling the trigger into a steadying affect, instead of disrupting the aim.

This is the only pistol I have shot like this. Many people say the single action rolls back in the hand with recoil. I have never felt any recoil, nor have I experienced the gun moving in my hand with this grip. This is an old gunfighter's secret, and I believe I'm the only writer ever to put it in print.

The 19th century design of the Single Action Army does have its limitations. Since it lacks a hammer bar safety like later revolvers, it must be carried with the hammer down over an empty chamber for safety. This is accomplished by loading one chamber, skipping one, loading four and then cocking. You can now lower the hammer down on an empty chamber.

Since it is almost as slow to reload as a cap-and-ball revolver using paper cartridges, a cowboy wouldn't have wanted to take this gun into a gunfight where there were more than five opponents.

However, it is so fast and sure with those five shots that he would've found it an excellent choice for five or fewer enemies. The .45 Colt, like the .45 ACP, was designed to stop a 1,500-pound cavalry horse with one shot, which it does easily. Obviously, man stopping comes easy with either caliber.

These pistols all share an ease of accuracy due to the best pointing characteristics possible. They are all extremely reliable in service use as well—with the M1911A1 being the most reliable pistol of all time. Even today there is no handgun approaching its level of effectiveness in combat. GDTM

Cocking the Colt Single Action Army is done with the thumb laid crossways over the hammer so the hand remains positioned as high as possible for accurate pointing.

The old gunfighter's secret grip is necessary to make the Colt Single Action point its best. The palm of the hand is against the backstrap, not beside it. The grip is as high as possible with the hammer spur digging into the back of the hand. The flat Colt logo panels at the top of the grip are squeezed between the thumb and the ball of the hand at the base of the trigger finger, both of which are angled downward. The trigger is hooked by the first joint of the trigger finger, while the tip of the trigger touches the tip of the thumb. Squeezing the flat logo panels aligns the gun with whatever you are pointing at, and squeezing the trigger is converted into a steadying force instead of a disruptive force—enabling the shooter to get the maximum accuracy from the gun and cartridge.

The key-mod handguard will have a lot of tactical fans wanting to shoot the DDM4V11 from Daniel Defense.

BY BRIAN MCCOMBIE

Cool & Functional

Daniel Defense's New DDM4V11

There was a time—and it wasn't that long ago—that the quad-rail was one of the coolest things about an AR-style rifle. Not only was the quad-rail oh so functional, allowing you to attach nearly every AR accessory known to mankind, but it was also big, burly and intimidating. It sent a message.

But it also had a tendency to chew up my hands whenever I used one for an extended period of time. Yes, you can attach rail covers to negate the sharp edges. But that tends to make the already large diameter of the quad even bigger and bulkier to hold on to when shooting; not to mention the quads could be heavy.

The new trend, and I welcome it 100 percent, is the key-mod handguard. "Mod" means modular, while "key" refers to (and describes) the keyhole look of the mounting slots. And the key-mod handguard was the first thing I noticed when the new DDM4V11 from Daniel Defense arrived. The DDM4V11 features the company's new SLiM Rail 15.0, a 15-inch handguard rail that has an uninterrupted Picatinny rail atop and key-mod attachment slots at 3, 6 and 9 o'clock positions. The key-mod system lets a shooter install components onto a rail that's more comfortable to my hands, and offers better "return-to-zero" capability than quads.

In fact, it is a great looking rifle all the way around. But how does it function? As good as it looks. That was my conclusion after a couple of sessions at the range, where the DD-M4V11 proved to be a sweet-shooting rifle, one that should appeal to the tactical and competition shooter, the home defense customer and even the hunting crowd.

Chambered in 5.56x45mm, the DDM4V11 arrived with open sights, a Daniel Defense A1 Fixed Rear Sight and a Daniel Defense Rail mounted fixed front sight. I removed both and mounted a new Trijicon VCOG (Variable Combat Optical Gunsight), a 1-6x24 scope with a first focal plane reticle and adjustable brightness settings, onto the DDM4V11.

In the Hand Performance

At the range, I tried out five different brands of .223 Rem. ammunition, one to two boxes each of: ASYM Precision, firing a 70-grain TSX bullet; Liberty

Silverado, with a 55-grain lead-free bullet; Hornady Superformance Varmint, with a 53-grain V-Max bullet; Winchester Razorback XT, with a 64-grain alloy bullet and a Dynamic Research Technologies, 79-grain nonfrangible hollowpoint bullet.

I first sighted it in at 25 yards with the ASYM rounds, and then moved to the 100-yard target. Given the different brands of ammunition and the various bullet weights, I was a little surprised at how "on" the rifle was with all the loads, requiring only a few clicks right or left on the VCOG to get the bullets on target. At that first session, and with some practice, I eventually got five-round groups down to 1.5 inches. By session two, those groupings shrunk by an average of a quarter-inch, with my best grouping right at .90 inches with the Liberty Silverado ammo.

The DDM4V11 uses a mid-length gas system, with the gas tube approximately 2 inches longer than the tube on a standard AR carbine-length system. That longer tube helps lessen the felt recoil by reducing the bolt carrier velocity. With less recoil, a shooter can place follow-up shots more accurately.

I had a lot of fun popping off multiple, fast shots and generally keeping them on target. My groups here weren't tiny—about twice the size of my palm—but firing fast and furious, at 100 yards? I was happy.

The other thing the rapid shooting revealed was that the SLiM Rail handguard protected my hand from excessive heat. In one shooting sequence, for example, with the rifle already warm, I ripped off 20 rounds in two 10-round bursts. Then I did another 10 rounds fast. My left hand felt the warmth rising up through the rails. But neither the rails nor my hand ever felt overheated.

The V11 is available in three models: the 16-inch Government, 16-inch Lightweight or 18-inch Strength-to-Weight. All are chambered in 5.56 and have machined aluminum lower receivers that feature Daniel Defense's enhanced flared magazine well.

The gas system is mid-length for the Government and Lightweight models, and the Strength-to-Weight model employs a rifle-length system. All three use Daniel Defense's new glass-filled polymer buttstocks and pistol grips, both covered in "soft touch" overmolding for a slightly tacky surface even when your hands become wet.

Magazines slid in smoothly. They ejected fine, too. The charging handle pulled back very easily, which is a plus when you have a scope mounted on an AR. The end of the scope doesn't always allow me to get my fingers as firmly around the charging handle as I'd like, and a bulky charging handle can be a real hassle in these situations. All in all, the DDM4V11 is a quality AR that should suit the needs of many shooters. GDTM

THE AUTHOR: Brian McCombie has written for dozens of magazines and loves shooting and hunting, especially with AR rifles. He's fairly crazy about hog hunting with ARs, but doesn't mind doing it with bolt-actions, handguns, slug guns and crossbows. Big Green teamed up with sister company DPMS to produce one nice shooting—and hunting—rifle.

BY BRIAN MCCOMBIE

Remington's Updated Hunting AR

Several years ago, Remington unveiled its new AR-style hunting rifle, the R-25. It was a solid, well-made rifle, fully capable of taking deer, and at the larger caliber offerings, elk. But, like a lot of AR's chambered in calibers larger than .223/5.56, the R-25 had some heft to it, 8.5 pounds to be exact. So Remington, its sister company, DPMS and their engineers crafted the Remington R-25 GII, the second generation of the R-25. A key aim was to make the GII lighter but with all the functionality of the original.

I think Remington and DPMS succeeded. I say that based on firing over 300 rounds through several different R-25 GIIs, all chambered in .308 Win, as well as the deer hunting I did with the rifle in early January 2015 in the Mississippi Delta. My first experience with the R-25 GII was at a Texas shooting range. I, along with three others, ran various .308 ammunition brands through the rifles during sight-in, practicing and hunting, firing bullets between 150 and 168 grains. None of us experienced a loading or extraction problem.

At the range, with a shooting sled, the R-25 GIIs, all of which were new and right out of the factory boxes, printed 1-inch and under groups, once we got used to the rifles, and made the necessary adjustments to our optics.

The GII is a full pound lighter than the originals, at 7.5 pounds. It points easily and swings onto the target fast when needed. Despite its reduced weight, the GII actually recoils less than the heavier, first generation models, something very apparent to me six weeks later when I got my second chance at the R-25 GII. I was part of a group invited by Remington to test various new products at Gunsite, in Paulden, AZ. Most of a morning and much of that afternoon was spent at the range with the GII's, all of them .308 Win models, firing at steel targets at 100, 150 and 200 yards—volume shooting, the kind you do when the ammunition's free.

Noticeably Less Recoil

After running a couple of 10-round magazines through the R-25, I mentioned to Adam Ballard, senior product manager for Remington Outdoor Company's Modern Sporting Rifles lines, that the recoil of this .308 was noticeably less than other 308's I've used. Yet, this rifle was lighter than those .308's, so shouldn't the R-25 GII kick harder?

Ballard explained that the internal workings of the GII's upper receiver have been significantly redesigned, including a lighter bolt/receiver configuration, which translates into less weight being driven back towards the shooter, reducing the felt recoil.

Much of that weight reduction comes from improved machining operations on the receivers, paired with a 7075 forging, allowing the GII's upper receivers, DPMS and R-25 GII to be smaller and lighter, yet stronger than the originals. DPMS also improved the bolt geometry to relieve stress lines, crafting a monolithic bolt carrier with dual extractors.

"The GII represents the most technologically advanced hunting MSR on the market," says Ballard. "The New Remington carbon fiber handguard and skeletonized stock with supercell recoil pad, along with the reduced size and weight of the GII platform, are designed for maximum comfort, weight reduction, and balance."

My GII had a smooth, two-stage trigger housed in an integral trigger

The Remington R-25 G-II proved lighter and more nimble from the bench, which translates well in the field when hunting, which is, of course, this ARs intended use. Author Photo guard and a Hogue pistol grip. The Remington carbon hand guard fit my hand nicely and stayed cool even with fast-paced shot strings being fired.

The rifles come camouflaged in the Mossy Oak Infinity pattern. Barrels are stainless steel, 20 inches long in all calibers, fluted with lightweight profiles, and are finished with Teflon. Steel insert feed ramps are standard.

Next, I used the GII on a Mississippi deer hunt, taking a nice buck with a single shot at 200 yards. I had to put a stalk on the deer, going through some thick, swampy brush, and then shooting from a sitting position on the

BARREL LENGTH

The Long & Short of It

Caribou country is big and open, one place where even the longest of barrels is no disadvantage. Author Photo

Though most shooters want the ballistic advantage of higher velocity that a longer barrel provides, velocity loss realized by a short barrel is of little consequence.

BY JON R. SUNDRA

There are times when a long barrel on a rifle can be a real plus, and other times when it can be anything from a minor inconvenience to a genuine liability. As for short barrels, they exact a toll in terms of velocity, steadiness of hold and tracking, but then there are times when lightweight and fast-handling properties are more important than other considerations.

First off, are there standards for barrel length? Yes and no. If we look at typical production bolt-action sporting rifles chambered in non-magnum calibers, 22-inch barrels are the norm. For belted and short magnums, it's 24 inches. Mind you there are many exceptions, but by and large that describes the typical production sporting rifle. With the coming of the super magnums like Remington's Ultra family and the big Weatherbys based on the .378 case, 26 inches is the standard, as it is for most heavy-barreled varmint rifles. But nothing's chiseled in stone.

Helping standardize things a bit was when SAAMI (Sporting Arms and Ammunition Manufacturers Institute) changed the test barrel standard from 26 inches to 24 inches. That made a lot of sense because the typical .270 or .30-06 owner whose production rifle more than likely had a 22-inch barrel had to assume a loss of 100 fps or more from his 4-inch shorter barrel. And magnum owners whose barrels were only 2 inches shorter than nominal still had to figure on at least an 80-100 fps loss. All calibers were affected, but two of the biggest losers were the .264 Win. and 7mm Rem. magnums. Consider: when the standard was changed from 26 inches to 24 inches, the nominal muzzle velocity for the .264's 140-grain factory load went from 3,200 fps to 3,030, a loss of 170 fps. And for the Big Seven's 150-grain load, it went from 3,260 fps to 3,110, a loss of 150 fps! Even the .270 Win. was docked from its original 3,140 fps to its current 3,060.

Situations where the carrying and handling ease of a carbine are real assets are when hunting in close cover, from tree stands, on horseback or getting in and out of vehicles frequently. Take eastern whitetail hunting, for example. Any modern cartridge from the .243 Win. to the .30-06 has all the power and flatness of trajectory needed to dispatch a deer out to at least 250 yards, a distance within which probably 97 percent of all whitetails are taken. That means the velocity loss realized by a short barrel is of little consequence. Even a 100-grain bullet from a .243 exits a 20-inch barrel at around 2,875 fps and delivers 1,100 ft. lbs. of energy at that distance, and it's the least potent of the cartridges mentioned herein! Typically, today's deer hunter is armed with much more capable cartridges the likes of the .25-06, .260 Rem., .270 Win., 7mm-08, .280 Rem., .308 Win. or .30-06. And we haven't even mentioned magnums, which continue to proliferate even among deer-only hunters.

If there are no practical disadvantages to a short barrel, why would anyone need anything longer than, say, 20 inches? Well, need has nothing to do with it; it's a matter of want. Most of us want the ballistic advantage of higher velocity that a longer barrel provides. And it's really not that much of a conscious decision on our part; most manufacturers decide for us by providing the appropriate barrel length for the cartridge in question. Want a 7mm or .300 Ultra Mag or one of the big Weatherbys? Then you're going to get a 26-inch barrel. Otherwise, the velocity loss per inch would be so great as to negate a big chunk of the performance edge you'd be getting over the 7mm Rem. or .300 Win. magnums, respectively. With the latter, anything less than a 24-inch barrel is going to nullify half the velocity edge you'd have gotten had you chosen a .280 Rem. or a .30-06.

Advantages of Longer Barrels

But it's not just a velocity/energy edge you get with a longer barrel; it's steadiness of hold and

The same barrel length does not mean the same overall length. The author's Ruger No. 1 in 7mm has the same length—26 inches—barrel as does the Model 700 above. The Ruger has the same overall length as a typical 22-inch-barreled bolt action. Author Photo

Shown here is a 7mm cartridge line-up that represents the various case displacements from smallest to largest (left to right), including a 7mm-08, .280 Rem., 7mm Rem. Mag., 7mm STW, 7mm Ultra Mag and 7.21 Lazzeroni Firebird. The 7mm-08 will lose about 20 fps per inch of barrel, the Firebird as much as 60 fps per inch. Author Photo more pleasant shooting that results from the added weight and length of the rifle. That goes for field shooting from any position using any type of rest, as well as the offhand tracking of a moving animal. While I'm perfectly happy with a 20-inch barrel on a whitetail rifle, I prefer 24 inches on general-purpose guns, and that goes whether the gun's chambered for standard or magnum calibers. As for the super mags, there are very few circumstances I'd consider carrying a 26-inch-barreled rifle, regardless of what I'm hunting or where. One exception would be a single-shot like the Ruger No.1 where a 26-inch barrel has a shorter overall length than a 24-inch-barreled bolt action.

And where dangerous game is concerned, there's no way I'd carry anything longer than a 22-inch barrel. I can't imagine who makes the decisions in those gun companies that furnish 24-inch and even 26-inch barrels on big bore calibers, but I can pretty much guarantee they've never hunted or helped track a wounded buffalo, elephant, lion or leopard in the long grass of Africa, or a big bear in the alders of Alaska. I have. And I can tell you that under those circumstances, shooting is invariably offhand and at close range—real close range. You want a gun that is responsive, one that mounts and points quickly and swings through a short arc, and forget the few fps and ft.-lbs. you're giving up to get it. Both are utterly inconsequential inside 50 yards, where even a .375 H&H has power to spare, to say nothing of the larger .375s, .416s and .458s. And if you have the luxury of a distant shot, a short-barreled DGR is neither a hindrance nor a liability.

Cartridge Considerations

We've seen that barrel length definitely affects velocity, but how exactly does the cartridge figure into it? Well, it's a matter of expansion ratio, a term that expresses the ratio of the volume of the cartridge case, i.e., its displacement, relative to the volume of the bore. The latter, of course, changes to some extent with the length of the barrel, while the former is a constant.

Cartridges with high expansion ratios lose less velocity per inch than those of low expansion ratios, regardless of caliber. To put it another way, cartridges with high ER's are more efficient. Take the 7mm-08 Rem., for example; it's the smallest cartridge of the current commercial 7mm line-up. To impart a muzzle velocity of 2,850 fps with a 140-grain bullet out of a 24-inch test barrel requires a propellant charge of around 45 grains (based on a published reloading data average).

At the other end of the spectrum we find Remington's 7mm Ultra Mag with a nominal MV of 3,425 fps for that same 140-grain bullet. The closest I've seen to duplicating that velocity among published reloading data was Hodgdon's. Their maximum load is 107 grains of H-870 for an MV of 3,350, or 75 fps less than nominal. That's almost 240 percent more powder to achieve a 15 percent increase in velocity. Cut the 7-08's 24-inch barrel to 20 inches and you'll lose about 100 fps. Cut the 7 Ultra Mag's spout from 26 inches to 22 inches and you'll lose 200 fps.

In many ways, ballistics are like optics; you get nuthin' fer nuthin'. Want steadier holding and better tracking characteristics, more comfortable shooting due to less muzzle blast and recoil, flatter trajectory and more delivered energy downrange? You can have 'em all if you're willing to tote a longer, heavier rifle. Want easier carrying and faster handling? You can have those, too, but you'll have to compromise on the other things, many of which are more academic than real. The decision's all yours. GDTM

The higher the ballistic coefficient, the better the bullet will resist atmospheric drag and the flatter its trajectory will be.

BY PHILIP MASSARO

Ballistic Coefficient

What Does It Mean to You?

Modern bullets have many different attributes, and their own jargon to describe these attributes. Meplat, ogive, sectional density, and the list goes on. Ballistic coefficient (BC) is the term that the ballisticians use to measure a particular bullet's ability to slice through the atmosphere, or to resist air drag. This is a complex topic, and although it is based on a scientific formula, the concept of accurately measuring BC is sometimes subjective and can even be the basis for argument. Rather than reach for my pocket protector and bore you to tears with equations, I'd like to do my best to correlate how BC can be used to your advantage.

Sir Isaac Newton, after being beamed in the noggin by that rather cheeky piece of rogue fruit, pioneered the study of gravitational pull. Those fantastic scientists that followed observed that all objects fall to the earth at a particular rate. In an environment where the atmospheric interference is minimal or nonexistent, objects of different weights will drop at the same rate. There was a famous experiment conducted by an astronaut on one of the Apollo moon missions where the gentleman dropped a hammer and a feather at the same time, and both landed on the moon's surface at the same time. See, there was little or no drag on those objects, and therefore, the gravitational force evened out.

How does this relate to our choice of bullets?

Well, because all objects fall to the earth at the same rate of speed, to have our chosen bullet cover the most ground (and have the flattest trajectory) before that gravitational pull yanks it southward we will need a bullet whose shape will have the least amount of drag. Let's put it into terms we shooters will best understand. At a uniform muzzle velocity, a bullet that has a flat nose or round nose will slow down faster than a spitzer bullet or a spitzer boattail, due to the fact that the sharp pointed spitzer slices through the atmosphere in a more efficient manner, and the flat and round nose profiles have more frontal surface area for the air to act upon.

A decimal portion of a number represents ballistic coefficient. The higher the number is, the better the bullet will resist atmospheric drag. So, accordingly, the round balls that muzzleloaders love will have some of the lowest BC measurements, followed by the flat points and round nosed bullets, with the spitzers and spitzer boattails being at the top of the heap. Within the spitzer bullets, the gurus have devised special formulas to obtain the highest BC they can. By using tangent or secant (and sometimes a combination thereof) curves to shape the ogive, or curved nose portion of the bullet, BCs have gotten higher and higher, making hitting distant targets easier for two reasons: they resist not only the air drag of a still environment, but they help us to buck the wind, which is important at the range and in the hunting fields.

Here is a good selection of bullet shapes. It is visibly evident why the spitzer and spitzer boattail bullets, due to their pointed noses and rear taper, can slice through air better than the round nose and semi-spitzer bullets, which push more air. Author Photo

Both the air density that the bullet is traveling through and the elevation of the test location can have an effect on a bullet's BC, and if you look at more advanced studies, a particular bullet's BC will change throughout its time of flight. There are several accepted models that define a bullet, and depending on the shape, the models vary. You may find, on the Berger website for example, that two or more BCs are given for a particular bullet, and the difference lies in standard model the listed bullet is being compared to. Berger often lists a BC for their bullets as compared to the G1 and G7 models, depending on the application.

The real issue involved in any particular shooting scenario (and thereby bullet choice) will be your shooting distance. Most of the modern centerfire rifle cartridges generate enough velocity that they may be sighted in so as to have a 200-yard zero. Even in this day and age of long-range cartridges, high magnification riflescopes with drop compensators built into them and rifles that would make Carlos Hathcock drool, I still believe that the average hunting shot is under 200 yards.

Slice Through The Atmosphere

If you're a hunter who likes round nose and flat nose bullets, you really won't be held back unless the ranges exceed 225 to 250 yards. But, if you hunt the wide-open spaces of the West, or the tioga of the far northern reaches, shots that are well over 300 paces aren't hard to find. These types of shots are where the spitzer and spitzer boat-tails really show their value. As bullets with a lesser BC will start to drop off rapidly, losing both their velocity and their retained energies, the higher BC bullets slice through the atmosphere, holding onto every precious foot-per-second of velocity.

Let's use the common example of three different .308-inch diameter 180-grain Speer bullets, fired at a muzzle velocity of 2,700 fps from a .30-'06 Springfield. The 180-grain round nosed bullet has a BC of .304, the 180-grain spitzer bullet has a BC of .438, and the 180-grain spitzer boattail has a BC of .540. Assuming a 200-yard zero, we can look at the drop of these bullets at 400 yards to better give an idea of what the effect of the BC will have on trajectory. At the 400-yard mark, the round nose bullet will have dropped 30.1 inches, the spitzer bullet will have dropped 25.1 inches and the boat tail drops 23.4 inches.

There is a significant and appreciable difference between the round nose and the two types of spitzer bullets, but the spitzer flat base and the spitzer boattail have a trajectory difference of less than 2 inches. The BC has an effect on the bullet energy also, as the round nose strikes with 1,060 ft.-lbs. at 400 yards, the spitzer has 1,494 ft.-lbs. and the boattail 1,704 ft.-lbs. Data like this indicates why long-range shooters prefer the higher BC bullets. (Data derived from the Speer Reloading Manual Number 13.)

Now, within any given caliber (read bullet diameter), a bullet of heavier weight has to be longer, because the bullet diameter can't change. The longer, heavier bullet has more mass and will retain its energy longer. This is a contributing factor to measuring a bullet's BC as well. The heavier bullet will also better resist wind drift, which is a feature we shooters can greatly appreciate.

The long-range target crowd can be very finicky about the shape and BC of their bullets. Their bullets do not have to offer deep penetration on game, as they are intended for paper or steel targets. Consistency is of utmost importance; as only a well-engineered bullet that is held to very tight tolerances will deliver the hair-splitting accuracy they pursue. There are entire product lines dedicated to the target crowd, and they most certainly work well. Sierra's Match King, Hornady's A-Max, Nosler's Custom Competition and Berger's Hybrid Target and Juggernaut Target come quickly mind. Most of these styles of bullets feature a hollow point and a boattail.

Oh, and what does that boattail do? The boattail is a severely beveled base of the bullet, precisely designed to allow air to flow around the bullet, much like water flows around the hull of a speedboat. This further reduces the effect of air drag and increases the BC of a bullet, giving a good trajectory on the truly long-range shots.

Hunters' Interests In Mind

But, bullet companies have realized that not just the target crowd wants to have that level of accuracy; we hunters want it too! However, hunters need to be concerned about bullet construction. Thank goodness the bullet producers have the hunters' interests in mind. Sierra makes a hollow-point GameKing bullet that offers a profile very similar to their MatchKing, with a boattail and a very thick jacket, which can approximate the accuracy of the target bullets (especially within sane hunting ranges) yet deliver the good expansion and penetration that ensures a quick humane kill. There are many good hunting bullets that are designed to deliver both a high BC and acceptable terminal performance, such as the Swift Scirocco, Nosler Accubond, Hornady Interbond, Berger VLD, and I could go on and on.

So, according to this information we should all be shooting bullets with the highest BC we can get right? Yes, and no. The high BC comes at a price. The bullets with the highest BC tend to be extremely long, and can pose a problem when they are loaded to the SAAMI maximum overall length. Sometimes when the cartridge overall length (C.O.L.) is adhered to, the bullet is seated so deep that the case mouth sits on the ogive, or curved portion of the bullet. That won't work, so the bullet needs to be seated to a longer C.O.L., and that may only work in single shots and certain bolt-action target rifles, as the cartridges will essentially be too long to feed from a box or tubular magazine.

This is why much of the popular factory ammunition uses bullets with a "middle-of-the-road" BC, because those bullets keep their weight forward and utilize a shorter C.O.L. Again, your particular shooting situation should dictate which bullet will work for you. If you tend to be a shooter whose shots remain relatively close, a round-nose or flat-nose bullet can still serve you just fine, but if long shots over windy terrain better describe your shots, look at the spitzers and spitzer boattails for an answer to your shooting needs

The lever-action carbines and rifles that many of us grew up hunting with are traditionally loaded with flat-point, and occasionally round-nosed bullets, to prevent the possibility of a primer detonation as the cartridges are loaded and carried head-to-tail in a tubular magazine. Combine the low BC of the bullets with the comparatively anemic velocities, when held up against other centerfire rifle cartridges, and you have the formula for the rainbow-like trajectories that are associated with these rifles.

Hornady came up with a rather ingenious solution: the FlexTip or FTX bullet. It is a spitzer bullet with a much higher BC than the traditional offerings, but with a special pliable tip that takes away the danger of magazine detonation. This gives Grandpa's old fetchin' iron a new lease on life, and rather dramatically extends the range of the classic .30-30 WCF and .35 Remington. Shots can be made out past 200 paces, and the new bullets retain more of their energy due to the spitzer shape and higher BC.

If you're a physics/mathematics/ballistics junkie (and I do profess to enjoy some of this material), there are entire volumes written on the subject of the effects of ballistic coefficient on long-range shooting. But if you're looking for a basic rule of thumb as a hunter or target shooter, look at the trajectory tables in a good reloading manual and you can see how a higher BC will help flatten out your trajectories. Be realistic about your anticipated ranges when picking a bullet, and you'll be a happy shooter. GDTM

Magazine Makeover

Convert your bolt-action rifle to take detachable box magazines

BY MARC PALMER, MSG USSF (RET.)

Historically, the two major goals that pushed firearms development were increasing accuracy and rapidity of fire. Sure, making guns smaller and lighter were of concern but increasing accuracy and rate of fire were preeminent. The introduction of the self-contained cartridge provided a range of options to increase the rate of fire. Various magazines were developed to include the tube magazine and the detachable box. From my research, the first successful detachable box magazine was created for the Gatling gun and little has changed in design since then other than the addition of a follower spring.

Having a detachable magazine allows a shooter to have multiple magazines loaded with different ammunition that can be readily swapped if required.

ACCURATE-MAG

REMINGTON SHORT-ACTION BOTTOM METAL KIT

Accurate-Mag (AM) of Monroe, CT, is one of the world's largest original equipment manufacturers of magazines. AM offers a full line of bottom metal kits and graciously provided their Remington 700 short-action (SA) kit to review. The SA trigger guard is constructed of aluminum and made to meet military specifications. It features a very even and durable black anodizing and a blued, cast steel release. In comparison to the factory unit, the trigger guard opening has been enlarged, making it easier to reach the trigger when wearing gloves. The kit comes with their five-round magazine (interchangeable with Accuracy International). It also comes with new screws (standard 1/4 28 socket-head cap screws) and pillars. For an additional $70, AM can also supply a very reliable 10-round magazine. ($340, accurate-mag.com)

BADGER ORDNANCE

M5 DBM

Badger Ordnance is located in Kansas City, MO, and was founded in 1982 by Martin Bordson. Badger provides a wide selection of parts and accessories to U.S. military, government and law enforcement entities with a focus on accuracy and quality. Marty's BDM trigger guard allows quick loading/unloading using AI magazines of either five- or 10-round capacity. The guard is made of aircraft-grade aluminum and is hard-coat anodized to military specifications; the wide, paddle-style magazine release is phosphated. Each guard is supplied with one five-round AI magazine, grade 5 TORX screws and pre-made bedding pillars to guarantee exact fit and perfect function. Inletting is required and can be done by Badger for a nominal fee. ($335, badgerordnance.com)

H-S PRECISION

AP 209-2

Located in Rapid City, SD, H-S Precision is one of the oldest large-scale custom gun companies in America. H-S Precision has been long renowned for accurate barrels and was an early manufacturer of fiberglass stocks. In fact, it was H-S that developed the aluminum-bedding block now found in stocks made by others. What is lesser known are their detachable magazine conversions designed to fit not only their rifles but as drop-ins for the Remington 700 as well. The trigger guard frame is constructed of stainless steel and is Teflon coated for corrosion resistance. It features an unobtrusive latch located in the front of the trigger guard bow where it is easily reached. The center feed/center stack boxes are constructed of steel and Teflon coated in a matte black finish, ensuring they will perform regardless of the weather conditions. ($300, hsprecision.com)

SURGEON RIFLES

SURGEON SHORT-ACTION BOTTOM METAL

Surgeon Rifles, Inc. is one of the premium arms companies owned by Strategic Armory Corps (SAC). SAC has a portfolio of premium arms companies that also includes ArmaLite and McMillan Firearms. Preston Pritchett, who is a gun guru with an obsession for accuracy, started Surgeon Rifles. Preston developed his own rifle action with a detachable magazine unit that will also fit the Remington 700. The bottom metal is made from 7075 aluminum with a hard anodized matte finish. It has a low profile ambidextrous magazine release that can be activated with the trigger finger releasing the AI magazine to drop free. Although not a drop-in, a McMillan Fiberglass stock was able to quickly fit one into an HTG stock for me using the supplied pillars and guard screws. ($325, surgeonrifles.com) GDTM

Chambers and
Barrel Wall Thickness

It's everything to the winning competitor."

Model: Ehlers Model Pocket Paterson

Title: Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Company - Ehlers Model Pocket Paterson

Description: John Ehlers was a major stockholder and treasurer of the Patent Arms Mfg. Co. when it went bankrupt. He seized the assets and inventory. These revolvers were Pocket Model Patersons that were not finished at the time. Ehlers had them finished and marketed them. They had an attached loading lever, and the abbreviation "Mfg Co." was deleted from the barrel stamping. There were 500 revolvers involved in the Ehlers variation society, and they were produced from 1840-1843.

LETHAL FORCE LAW: Get the Facts

Massad Ayoob's first book on the use of deadly force by the private citizen in defense of self and others, In the Gravest Extreme, is considered the authoritative text in its field. Deadly Force is the follow-up to this groundbreaking guide, incorporating Ayoob's thirty extra years of experience, during which he's been an expert witness in weapons cases, chair of the Firearms Committee of the American Society of Law Enforcement Trainers, and much more.

This guide will help you understand any legal and ethical issues concerning the use of lethal force by private citizens. You'll also learn about the social and psychological issues surrounding the use of lethal force for self-defense or in defense of others. In addition to exploring these issues, Ayoob also discusses the steps a responsible armed citizen can and should take in order to properly prepare for or help mitigate a lethal force situation.

Own a Piece of History

The Ithaca 1911 Model .45

Between 1942 and 1945, Ithaca made 382,000 of the .45 caliber Model 1911A1 pistols for the U.S. military. In 2010 Ithaca introduced our modern, precision manufactured version of the venerable 1911 utilizing state of the art CNC processes.

Based on the success of that release, Ithaca is proud to offer our Carry version of the 1911. This pistol comes standard with a full sized grip and a 4.25" barrel and the same excellent quality and accuracy offered by every all-American made Ithaca firearm.

We are proud that our firearms are built by Ithaca's dedicated employees in Ohio, with the final assembly done by true gunsmiths who love guns as much as you do. Call 419-294-4113 to discuss how Ithaca can build one of the worlds finest 1911's just for you.
